

Plymouth-Trinity United Church

Members of Plymouth Congregational Church (left) built the church on Dufferin Avenue at the bottom of Montreal Street in 1855. The Plymouth name has origins in New England.

Trinity Methodist Church (below) was built in 1886 on the corner of Court and William Streets.

On June 10, 1925, the congregation of the Plymouth and Trinity churches became part of The United Church of Canada.

Sangster Memorial United Church on Denault Street held services from 1949 until it closed in 1968.

In 1971, the Plymouth and Trinity congregations merged to form Plymouth-Trinity United Church, worshipping in the Plymouth building.

When the churches came together, the Trinity building was demolished. However, the rose window, war memorial tablets and segments from the memorial windows were moved to the Plymouth building, along with the pulpit, communion table and font, which are in the chapel built in 1974.

Our Congregation

We come from varying geographical and religious backgrounds, and many aspects of our congregational life reflect this diversity. We are bound by a strong congregational fabric and value times of fellowship.

Our worship is a mixture of contemporary and traditional styles. Music and the Children's Time are both integral parts of our services. In acknowledging our French-speaking parishioners, we offer French worship services as well as joint bilingual services.

We publish our church newsletter Update twice a year, with reports on past and future events and news about our church community. Our dedicated UCW group undertakes two major annual fundraising events and supports the congregation in many ways.

Our building is wheelchair-accessible and has an elevator between the sanctuary and main hall.

Outreach

Our members and adherents are involved in more than 30 community groups. As a Jubilee community, we encourage the purchase of local and Fair Trade products. We engage in annual projects such as Lenten, fall and Christmas campaigns for local and overseas needs, as well as weekly offerings for the local food bank.
